HARDEE is ATHLETE of the YEAR World and American Rankings Released

Hello Again.....A little bit of 2011. T&F News rankings are now available and, to no one's surprise, Trey Hardee, undefeated with decisive victories at Götzis and Daegu, was ranked 1st nationally and globally. As well, the 6-5, 204 lb Austin native was named the 2011 "U.S. Athlete of the Year," by T&FNews.

World leader Ashton Eaton was 2nd on both lists and 2011 marked the 10th time in a century and the first time since 1975 (Bruce Jenner and Fred Dixon) that Americans were ranked 1st and 2nd globally.

It came as no surprise that world champ Trey Hardee was ranked first globally.

The American rankings marked a dramatic shift towards the collegiate scene...one half of the ranked athletes were collegians, almost like roll call at the NCAA championships. As recently as 1996 no US collegian was nationally ranked as the event's top tier belonged exclusively to post-collegians. The last time that as many as five collegians were ranked nationally was 1984 (Muzzio, Ramos, Gonzales, Connolly and Sayre). But 2012 is not 1984 when the world top rankings were dominated by guys named Thompson, Hingsen and Wentz.

Not only does the US enjoy the top tier world rankings (don't forget current Olympic champ Bryan Clay and '10 national champ Jake Arnold, both of whom were injured last season...and now incidentally, train together) but there's a good deal of talent out there and much of it is very young.
